KSP 0.14.1 2018 no survey! Kerbal Space Program is a pretty awesome space simulator video game. It's currently around 2.8 million downloads strong and the game continues to be updated and improved. In fact, as of early 2018, the game has seen a few updates and with this big patch, they've added Kerbal Space Program Season 3, more dynamic solar wind effects, new weather effects, asteroid structures, and new mission types. We've been working with the team and we're really excited to see what future updates bring. Right now, we've got a quick survey to show them what we want for KSP 0.14.1. Check out the KSP Survey for 0.14.1 2018 and help us to shape the future of the game! The History of Kerbal Space Program Launched in 2010, the KSP team at Squad designed the game to be a fully physics-driven, indie space simulator where you build and manage your own spacecraft. It's a space simulator where you, the player, can create and control your own rocket to leave Earth's atmosphere and begin exploring the universe. "As far as I know, every other space game is either a shooter, a turn-based strategy game, or a text adventure," says Matt Sherman, KSP's lead designer and the creator of the game. There are several other space sims available but none of them feature a physics engine, so you have to choose between building it in or out. Unfortunately, physics engines come with a lot of technical constraints. "The issue," he says, "is it makes it hard to play games. When you want to play a game, you want to sit back and relax. When you have to code, you're thinking about it all the time." The lack of a physics engine is a big part of what has contributed to KSP's growing popularity. The development team at Squad wanted a game that was easy to play, so they decided to use a game engine that they already knew and used inside of their other games. They chose the Unity game engine because they knew it would be easy to code. Kerbal Space Program is more than a game. The Kerbal Space Program community has grown to over a million players since its 82157476af
